

(Your Child's Name)'s Post Card Project

After the first few deployments it does start to dawn on you that the soldier's family at home could use a care package as much as the soldier themselves! ;) So I decided to send the following email out to the adults in my child's life; to family, friends, teachers, and other adults who help shape who she is going to be someday. (I did not tell my daughter about the project at all). I decided what ever would be sent to her should be a complete surprise.

Subject: The _____ Postcard Project :)

You have received this email because you are near and dear to my daughters heart. :)

Her dad is deployed for a 4th time, and I was wondering if you might not, over the next 10 months, drop a few postcards in the mail for _____ with a little positive word or two on it.

It would mean a lot.

Here is her address if you would like to participate:

Thank you so much!

She has quite a little collection going, and the randomness of when a note will show up keeps her excited about it. You know how much it means to a child to get a piece of mail in the mail box with THEIR name on it! You'd think they won the lottery. I also think it is good for her to have those reminders about the people around her who are for her, and will help support her.

PS- We've started keeping the postcards in a little book- the picture to the right is what she drew about getting the "surprise cards" She calls it "I am So Happy!!!!"

Have fun and enjoy!
